

Contents

Introduction .....	7
Chapter One
The meaning of one's own place: Some conceptual remarks on space and nationalism .....	25
1.1. Representations of space in twentieth-century theories .....	28
1.2. From a political ideology to a cultural self-awareness – the changing approach towards the concept of nationalism in the twentieth century and beyond .....	45
1.3. Ethnic vs. civic nationalism – the Irish context .....	53
Chapter Two
National and individual identity within the domestic space on the example of William Trevor's and Jennifer Johnston's novels .....	71
2.1. The big house as the last epitome of Protestants' Irishness in William Trevor's The silence in the garden .....	76
2.2. The end of the Big House ethos in William Trevor's Love and summer .....	88
2.3. The question of a heterogeneous identity in Jennifer Johnston's Fool's sanctuary .....	96
2.4. Individual identity with(out) memory – Foolish mortals by Jennifer Johnston .....	107
Chapter Three
The local sense of place – the past vs. the present of the Irish countryside in the works of John McGahern and Deirdre Madden .....	119
3.1. The local as the universal – two sides of John McGahern's countryside in Amongst women .....	125
3.2. John McGahern's That they may face the rising sun as the writer's reconciliation with the countryside .....	135
3.3. A desolate province or a rural paradise? Deirdre Madden's Nothing is black .....	142
3.4. Ireland as a province in Deirdre Madden's Molly Fox's birthday .....	152

---

Chapter Four
Glenn Patterson's Belfast vs. Anne Enright's Dublin – Ireland
from two perspectives .....	163
4.1. Belfast as a synecdoche for Northern Ireland in Glenn Patterson's Fat lad .....	167
4.2. Belfast vs. Hiroshima – Glenn Patterson's The third party .....	180
4.3. Memories de/encoded within the space of the city – Dublin in Anne Enright's The gathering .....	189
4.4. Between boosting and flagging economy – contemporary Dublin in Anne Enright's The forgotten waltz .....	200
Conclusion .....	211
Domy, miasteczka, miasta – zmiana w postrzeganiu przestrzeni i miejsca we współczesnych powieściach irlandzkich (Streszczenie) .....	217
References .....	225